

Dr. Meghana Nayak

“Rethinking Global Politics: Why it's not always about the U.S.”

Thursday, April 14, 2011, 4:00-5:00 pm

Mood-Bridwell Atrium
Southwestern University

From the devastating earthquake in Haiti to the recent and ongoing uprisings in the Middle East, why do we often focus more on what the U.S. should do or not do about various global events than on other countries' reactions or even the stories of the people directly affected? Join Dr. Meghana Nayak, Southwestern graduate, 1997, for an interactive discussion about your role as students and residents of the U.S. in questioning the way things are, and in imagining new possibilities.

A reception immediately follows the lecture.

Sponsored by the Political Science Department, the Feminist Studies Department, Global Citizens, the Office of Civic Engagement, and the Office of Admissions.

POPULATION ADJUSTED WORLD MAP